New high school, fundraising, calendar occupy board attention

sleader

by Dave DeMars news@thenewsleaders.com

The Sartell-St. Stephen School Board had a full menu of items that occupied its attention at the regular Jan. 22 meeting. Those concerns included the progress of the new high school, fundraising for a new athletic complex and school calendars for 2018 through 2020.

Sartell-St. Stephen

Lee Gruen, project manager for the new high school, presented the board with a progress report. Eight working days have been lost in December and January because of cold weather setting exterior framing back about a week. Despite that Gruen was optimistic in his assessment of progress made on days that were able to be worked.

Precast walls in the theater area and the gym are complete with work starting on the pool as of Jan. 18.

Roofing has started on the theater and the use of temporary heat sources has allowed for interior plumbing, electrical and heating work to progress. Much of the work is what is referred to as roughing in.

There is still a concern about the possibility of more cold weather, so the warm days of the past week were very welcome. The building has been divided into eight areas with different work proceeding in each area. Gruen said the entire building should be enclosed and roofed by June 21 of this year. That gives contractors about a year to complete the necessary interior and decorative exterior work. Presently about 50 to 60 workers are on the job. Once the building is enclosed and interior work begins in earnest, it's expected there will be 150 to 200 workers.

The building is on budget and School • page 5

in early stages Text-to-911 SI

by Vicki Ikeogu news@thenewsleaders.com

It's been nearly two months since the Minnesota Department of Public Safety launched the textto-911 service statewide. But since the service has been active, law enforcement throughout Stearns County have seen limited use of the technology.

"As far as I know, we haven't had any 911 calls through texting," said St. Joseph Police Chief Joel Klein.

And the same is true in Sartell. situation where the caller was unable to talk but was able to communicate to us through texting," said Sartell Police Chief Jim Hughes.

While the number of text-to-911 calls is not as high as Stearns County Public Safety Services Supervisor Mary Lieser and Stearns County Dispatch Supervisor Michele Burke had originally anticipated when the service went public on Dec. 5, the two believe use of the service will increase as time goes on.

"Other states have implemented it before us," Burke said. "But it's just coming here now."

The text-to-911 system, accord-"We had handled one domestic ing to Burke, works similarly to a traditional voice call. People text text-to-911 calls are being handled their emergency situation to 911 where a dispatcher answers the call for service.

"It rings (the dispatch center) like a phone line does," Burke said. "And when dispatch opens up that message on their screen it will appear almost like a TTY similar to the deaf and hard of hearing. They have machines they can use to make their phone calls where they type back and forth to whoever they are talking to. And (textto-911) sort of acts like that."

Burke said because of a lack of appropriate infrastructure in place at Stearns County, all of the

"The state is broken up into regions and we are part of the Central Region," Burke said. "So what happened was they wanted the whole state to go live all at the same time. But not all (county dispatch centers) were able to do that because either they needed upgrades or equipment. So they have one agency per region right now at least who is taking the text-to-911 calls for the rest of the region. And right now, we are not live. Mille Lacs County is the one who is taking the text-to-911s in our region."

Fr. Kevin Anderson and Nathan Mathews will perform at the concert, which will feature Anderson's latest recording, HOPE. He uses spiritual insights from 30 years of priesthood to form a tranquil sound that has been described as "Enya meets John Denver meets God."

Anderson said the event is for all ages and faith back- songwriter, grounds and is a night based on hope to offer hope. It's meant to be an evening of song and reflection and a mini-retreat night.

Mathews said the two plan to perform works Anderson wrote and/or assisted with. The two have worked together on Anderson's compact disc recordings and have performed at many retreats/reflections concerts and benefit concerts.

Mathews may also play a few piano songs he wrote for a recording he created in 2001

Mathews is the city manager for Bemidji. He grew up in St. Cloud, attended St. Augustine's school and graduated from Cathedral High School. He met Anderson while he was attending John XXIII Middle School, and the two have been creating music together for 30 years.

Mathews said he has played liturgical music all of his life. He graduated from St. John's University in Collegeville with a degree in English and a minor in piano performance. During college, he was involved in campus music ministry at the College of St. Benedict.

Mathews studied Suzuki piano with Terri Dulugosch of St. Augustine's Parish as a child and studied classical piano with Dr. Paul Wirth at the Central Minnesota School of Music in middle school and high school. He also studied classical piano with Dr. William Ibes of SJU. After graduation from the university, he worked at Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wis. as director of liturgical music for four years.

Mathews earned a master's degree in public administration from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, and previously worked as the city administrator for the outstate Minnesota areas of Staples and Winnebag0.

He currently accompanies liturgies at St. Phillip's Catholic Church in Bemidji.

Mathews and his wife, Elizabeth, who have been married for 17 years, have three children.

Anderson has performed many concerts in the St. Cloud area. Those have included benefit concerts for the Anna Marie Shelter and Cathedral High School. He was a featured singer during Cathedral's Rock Around the Clock fundraisers for the arts.

Anderson also played the role of Jesus in the St. Cloud Theatre Group production of Jesus Christ Superstar, appeared on numerous recordings sponsored through Together Encounter Christ, and won first place in the National Association of Teachers of Singing in 1991.

Anderson, a singer and songwriter, teamed up with Mathews in the early 1990s when Mathews was a student of his at Cathedral High School.

Anderson said he wrote the music, but Mathews brought it to life with his piano music.

Place of Hope Ministries in St. Cloud focuses on restoring and bringing hope to people who are struggling. Its ministry services include hospitality, meals, sheltering homeless residents, Sober Support, Hope for Veterans, teaching life skills, children's outreach, jail and prison outreach, developing orphanages in Africa and much more.

The mission of the St. Francis Xavier Social Justice Concerns Committee is to "foster education, prayer and action around various social justice concerns of the day and to reach out to the parish in various ways to build the reign of God in our midst."

Molly Wevrens from Central Minnesota Catholic Worker said the group holds discussions about various topics, sponsors those who are homeless for a week each year and seeks to keep Catholic social teaching alive in the parish. Housing and hunger are the group's current issues.

There is a nominal fee per person or a family group rate for the event.

Sneaky disease almost kills Sartell baby

by Dennis Dalman editor@thenewsleaders.com

Most people, if they even hear of it, will dismiss from their minds National Kawasaki Disease Awareness Day, Jan. 26. Most have never heard of it.

Not the Stephen and Julie Muenchow family of Sartell. They hope people on that day and forever after will learn and remember what that disease is. Kawasaki can be deadly if it is not caught in time.

And they should know. Their baby, Gavin, had it when he was born May 5, 2016, but his parents didn't know it, their doctors didn't know it and nobody else had a clue. At least not at first. Gavin had symptoms that were puzzling but not necessarily alarming. He had a persistent fever, then he had what seemed like "pink eye" followed by a body rash and a swollen and reddish tongue.

The symptoms began appearing 12 days after Gavin was born. Eventually, medical experts put two and two together, they connected the dots and then they knew the baby's symptoms spelled Kawasaki disease, named for the Japanese doctor who first described it in 1967.

It is also known as mucocutaneous lymph-node syndrome. What happens is that blood vessels throughout the body become inflamed, causing heart problems that can prove fatal to children unless the disease is treated in time.

The inflammation of blood vessels can weaken and destroy the heart, killing a child. It can be remarkably rapid if the disease is not recognized and treated in time. And time is the crucial word. If not treated in a very narrow window of opportunity, the disease almost certainly will be fatal. The cause of Kawasaki disease is, so far, unknown, although experts suspect a combination of genetic and environmental factors, perhaps complicated by auto-immune mechanisms that can trigger it. Airborne pathogens have also been suspected.

No clue

The Muenchow family had never heard of Kawasaki disease. When Gavin, their second boy, was born, they suspected nothing other than why his persistent fever just would not go away.

"His fever lasted day in, day out," Julie Muenchow said. "It was so bad he finally had to go to Children's Hospital (in the Twin Cities). Then there was his swollen red tongue, body rash, red eyes, inflammation." Fortunately, adding up the strange symptoms, doctors figured it out: Kawasaki disease.

Before the diagnosis, Julie and Stephen endured a roller-coaster ride grass fields. Heavy use of grass of awful emotions.

"It was terrifying," Julie said. "The worst part was the not-knowing. Not knowing what was wrong. And no plan of action. All that was going on was treating symptoms after he was 6 weeks old."

Kawasaki disease most often afflicts children ages 5 and under, with children between the ages of 2 and 4 being most common. It is most prevalent in Asian boys, but it can afflict girls, too, and children of any race.

Cure

Fortunately, an intravenous treatment saved Gavin's life. An injection of immunoglobulin (a product of blood plasma) worked wonders for Gavin after only one infusion.

"In just 12 hours after the infusion, there was a big improvement in Gavin," Julie said. "It was amazing. It was the final piece of the puzzle. We were told the intravenous treatment shocks the immune system from going into overdrive."

The Muenchows, however, didn't dwell on the medico-techno specifics. They were just so happy to have Gavin back, smiling, happy, healthy. And so was Gavin's older brother, 5-year-old Owen. Young as he was, he was so worried about his younger brother, whom he called "My Baby."

Owen instantly noticed how Gavin had come back healthier, happier.

<image>

Owen Muenchow (right) gives a kiss and a hug to brother Gavin shortly after Gavin's health was restored. The brothers are inseparable buddies, especially after Gavin's life was severely threatened by a mysterious disease.

"Gavin is so happy-go-lucky now," Julie said. "He's ever so sweet. So healthy."

A year after his diagnosis his heart looks just fine.

Be vigilant

The Muenchows are grateful for Kawasaki National Awareness Day, Jan. 26, because they want all parents to learn the symptoms of the disease: persistent fever, reddish eyes, swollen bright red tongue and body rashes.

The Muenchows are also firm believers in blood donation. It takes about 1,000 individual blood donations to provide the plasma from which the immunoglobulin cells are derived and used for infusions that cure Kawasaki disease.

"Be persistent and trust your instincts," Julie advised other parents. "What may seem very insignificant, like a rash, can be a very important clue. It's important to write down symptoms when they happen so they can be put together like pieces in a puzzle if need be later."

Athletic complex fundraising

Shawn Ogelsby, president of the Sartell Area Youth Soccer Association, and Kai Lewis, vice president of the Sartell Area Youth Football Association, made a presentation to the board on behalf of community fundraising for a community athletic complex they identified as a multisport stadium project.

It's not just a stadium for football, but for many sports such as lacrosse, soccer and other sports as well, Lewis said. Part of the reason a stadium would be desirable is the increased number of players in these various sports. A stadium would include artificial turf.

Lewis and Ogelsby provided some rough cost estimates for the various aspects of the building project: $750,000 for artificial turf, $1.2 million for the stadium itself and $750,000 for the track.

Funds would be raised in the community and by partnering with local businesses. Among the possible funders mentioned were Coborn's, DeZurik and K & A Autobody.

According to Lewis and Ogelsby, there is a need for improved facilities and this would provide a possible savings in the long run considering maintenance and upkeep costs of fields often results in poor playing surfaces. Artificial surfaces last as long as 10 to 13 years with a minimal amount of maintenance. Many of the surrounding communities – Sauk Centre, Monticelmunities – Sauk Centre, Monticello, Sauk Rapids, Alexandria, Buffalo and Brainerd – have invested in artificial-turf fields and in improved sports complexes. St. Cloud Tech and Apollo will probably be getting turf soon.

Several board members expressed concerns about funding the turf and complex.

"There has been considerable conversation about is turf necessary," said Superintendent Jeff Schwiebert. "I would make the argument we should go with the grassbased field and the bleachers and the lights would help complement that."

Board member Pam Raden expressed excitement over the possibility of the complex.

"One of the concerns I have is we asked the community for a really big gift to build the high school, and we may be asking for additional funds," said board member Mary McCabe.

She went on to say it would not be a good idea to be in competition for the funds in the future.

"There is only a finite amount of money out there," McCabe said. "I don't want to put the board in the position of competing for dollars to finish up our (building) project. It's important what we are doing in our project which is to build a school. We do have a phase two, and a phase three."

She went on to say fundraising for the project was a laudable effort, but expressed the need for caution in approaching the community because of the number of projects going on.

Schwiebert cautioned the board's attentive listening to the presentation should not be construed as approval or a willingness to commit to the idea of turf or the stadium.

School calendar

The board tackled the issue of the school calendar and immediately hit a stumbling block when board member Lesa Kramer proposed accepting the 2018-2019 calendar, but tabling the 2019-2020 calendar.

Schwiebert told the board the issues in making a calendar were the issues that always seem to plague the process even though a 20-member committee helped create it. Of concern was whether to have a spring break; when should spring break occur; if spring break were eliminated, should long weekends or something along that line be introduced in its place; and where to provide professional development days. Also in the mix was concern for accommodating spring and winter sports scheduling.

"I believe we have to approve the 2018-2019 calendar because we have established a pattern," Schwiebert said. "People are already expecting this for the 2018-2019 year and I don't think we can make any changes to that."

Schwiebert went on to explain a major change is going to occur in 2020-2021 and referred to it as "the great change" when kindergarten through eighth grade will be changed throughout the district.

Kai Lewis advocates for improved sports facilities during the Jan. 22 school board meeting. With the increased participation and emphasis at all ages on sports such as lacrosse as well as standbys like football and soccer, there is a need for more and better athletic fields, Lewis said.

Because of that change, Schwiebert thought that would be the ideal time to make changes to the 2019-2020 calendar.

"No matter what we do with the calendar, there will always be a sizable portion of your audience that doesn't like what you have done," Schwiebert said.

In the end, Kramer's motion to approve the 2018-2019 calendar and table the 2019-2020 calendar passed with a 4-1 vote, with board member McCabe casting the no vote.

The approved 2018-2019 calendar provides for the start of school on Sept. 4, spring break from March 25-29, and the last day of school for students on May 31.

Other business

The board heard a brief presentation on the proposed decentralization of the media center in the new high school. Because of a shift in the philosophy of how to accommodate better learning, the idea of having more immediacy of access to books and media space is the driving force.

"We want kids to be able to grab books where and when they need to grab them," Schwiebert said.

That means making access to books and media available throughout the building and in the various learning areas rather than in a centralized repository as was the case for many years. The open design of the new school also facilitates this idea.

"Learning should be visible," Principal Brenda Steve said. "We will see what our kids are doing."

Steve also provided the board with curriculum and program changes for 2018-2019. Five new courses will be implemented including two courses in the business area, a new advanced music theory class, a class in government and one in robotics technology.

Our View Fischbach's new role needs Constitutional solution

Constitutions are meant to be vague. Those documents are foundations for our state and national governments. They set down the basic principles and powers of our governments. The legislature, executive and courts decide the details.

That works fine until something odd happens.

Something odd has happened and it's time for an update to Minnesota's Constitution.

The chain of unusual events started when Sen. Al Franken resigned amid charges of sexual misconduct.

Minnesota's Democratic governor, Mark Dayton, appointed his lieutenant governor, Tina Smith, to replace him.

That move sent both political parties to their law books and copies of the Minnesota Constitution that calls for the president of the Senate to become lieutenant governor.

The current Senate president is Republican Michelle Fischbach, who represents the St. Joseph and Sartell-St.Stephen areas in District 13.

Fischbach and Republicans argue she can do both jobs. DFLers say the Constitution prohibits her from holding both offices and they want her to resign her Senate seat. A Ramsey County judge will decide the matter after a Democrat in District 13 filed a lawsuit.

The Constitution says "No senator or representative shall hold any other office under the authority of the United States or the state of Minnesota, except that of postmaster or of notary public. If elected or appointed to another office, a legislator may resign from the legislature by tendering his resignation to the governor." The words "shall" and "may" provide room for dispute.

There are practical and political arguments on both sides.

First the practical. Fischbach's claim she can do both jobs makes sense. This is a short legislative session focused on bonding, Fischbach is an experienced legislator and Dayton and his lieutenant governor won't be running for re-election. Fischbach's seat isn't open until 2020. If Fischbach resigns her Senate seat, the governor would call a special election to fill it. She has offered to collect only her Senate pay.

The real battle hangs on the political issues be cause the Republicans could lose control of the Senate. They hold a narrow 34- to 32-seat advantage. If a DFLer wins a special election to replace Dan Schoen (a Democrat) who resigned after sexual harassment claims, then the Senate would be split 34-33. If the DFL wins the lieutenant governor case in court, the split would be 33-33 pending an election to replace Fischbach.

The courts may end up deciding the issue. A permanent solution would be to amend the state Constitution so the governor can appoint a new lieutenant governor to be confirmed by the Senate.

In 1857 when the Constitution was written, there was so much discord Democrats wouldn't sign a document with Republican signatures and Republicans wouldn't sign a document bearing the signatures of Democrats.

There is evidence both documents were presented to Congress when it approved Minnesota's Constitution and the state was admitted to the Union on May 11, 1858.

Now 160 years later, the tradition of discord continues.

White-nationalist group puts up poster ignorance

Silence can implicate us. It can make us complicit when we know something is wrong, but we do not speak up against the wrong.

We all know extreme cases of that - Nazi Germany, to name one. On Jan. 17, many St. Joseph residents woke up to see "White Nationalist" posters stapled to telephone poles. Similar posters have been popping up throughout the greater St. Cloud area.

Posters of that ilk were plastered everywhere in Germany during the rise of Nazism. The ones in St. Joseph were obviously influenced by vile Nazi sloganeering. For instance, the "cross" on the posters, with its spiky arm extensions, looks as if it's about to morph into a Nazi swastika. The faces of the man and woman on one of the posters looks as if they came directly from Nazi propaganda drawings - the blonde sculpted Aryan look, their eyes fixed upon the horizon of the future - members of the so-called "Master Race" as it was ludicrously envisioned by Adolf Hitler and his vicious propagandists and goon squads.

The posters contain phrases from the white-nationalist chants heard in Charlottesville, Va. during the demonstrations there in which a racist murderer slammed his car into a group of people, killing a young woman.

Some of the blunt poster sentences are these:

"We have a right to exist."

"You will not replace us."

"It's okay to be white." "There are 2 genders."

"Hate speech is free speech."

Then there is a preposterous sentence, which is not really a sentence. Typically, white nationalists are not very well educated, in grammar or anything else for that matter.

The wannabe sentence states: "You expect to be sheltered from ideas that challenge your narrow world view, well prepare to be triggered."

Here we have a group of people who are anti-black, anti-immigrant, anti-Jewish, anti-LGBTQ, and this group is telling the rest of us that we are "sheltered from ideas," that we have a "narrow world view." It's almost funny because look who's talking. The words warn us that we will be "triggered." (no doubt a veiled threat of being shot). Or do they mean to gas us all?

Why do those people feel so insecure? Why do they feel so threatened by diversity, by people whose skin happens to be darker than theirs? Why do they wrap themselves in such hatreds? Is there anything they do like, besides themselves? Why can't they welcome the diversity that is an underlying strength of America and always has been.

Ray Sjogren, a St. Joseph resident, took it upon himself to take down the posters, as did St. Joseph police because putting posters on telephone poles is not allowed.

"If we're silent then we're complacent," Sjogren said.

Yes, complacent and complicit. Thank you, Mr. Sjogren; thank you, police officers.

Let's all speak up against the neo-Nazi garbage.

A good way to counter that crap is to donate to UniteCloud, a website started by Natalie Ringsmuth of Waite Park that promotes kindness, understanding, diversity and equality among all the good people who live and work here.

Know the facts on government shutdown

It's official, for the first time in almost five years, the federal government of the United States shut down. In a last-ditch vote on Friday, Jan. 19, the Senate voted 50-49 to pass a continuing resolution to fund the government in Washington for an additional month. How did this happen, and how does this affect you? Those questions, and some myths about the shutdown, will be addressed here.

First, what is a government shutdown? It means the federal government of the United States has run out of funds allocated to it for a certain time period. This means all government services and functions deemed "non-essential" are curtailed. National parks and monuments close, new actions by certain agencies are suspended, but things such as the military and Social Security stay functioning.

How does this sort of thing keep happening? The last government shutdown in 2013, which lasted for 16 days, went along similar lines. That time, the dispute was over Obamacare. The Republican-controlled House of Representatives wanted to cut Obamacare, while the Democratic Senate wanted to keep it in place. Because the major parties could not agree on a budget for the next fiscal year, a continuing resolution failed to pass to extend government funding, and the shutdown occurred.

This time around, the Republicans control the House, Senate and the presidency, so what's holding things up? This is the charge many have laid against Donald Trump and the Republican congressional leadership. They control all the levers of government, so the shutdown is entirely their fault right? Well, it's not quite that simple. While the House can pass appropriations bills by a simple majority, which it did the preceding Thursday, in the Senate they require 60 votes. The Republicans hold only 51 Senate seats, which means nine Democrats were needed to keep the government running.

So what was the holdup? The answer is a program called DACA, or Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals. Under this program created by President Obama in 2012, around 800,000 illegal immigrants who were brought to the United States as children were protected from deportation. In September 2017, President Trump rescinded the program and gave Congress until March 5, 2018, to send him a bill concerning it before it expired. Democrats want language about DACA included in the government funding, while Republicans and Trump want DACA to be part of a wider immigration deal including money for a wall and other immigration measures.

In the Senate, 45 Republicans and 5 Democrats voted to continue to fund the government, while 44 Democrats and 5 Republicans voted against the resolution. By percentages, this means almost 90 percent of the 51 Republican senators voted against the shutdown, while the opposite is true for 90 percent of the 49 Democratic senators. Whether or not you believe the Republicans should have caved to Democratic demands, Democrats are mathematically responsible for the shutdown.

This was a similar pattern to 2013, when the vast majority of Republicans voted to shut down the federal government over Obamacare. They were rightly blamed then because the math worked the same way. The Democrats have now committed the identical action here in 2018.

Of course, when legislative bickering like this happens, we all lose. I would have hoped to see some sort of bipartisan deal, but politicians in Washington seem to be more interested in making stands on their favorite issues rather than working for the common benefit of the American people.

If we want to keep things like this from continuing to occur, we as citizens need to remain vigilant and hold our lawmakers accountable. We need to follow the news and events and see which politicians are working for us, and which are working for their political party. Keeping a close eye on things, and voting out those in Congress who aren't doing their jobs, is the only way to have the functioning government we deserve.

Burke said she estimates nearly a dozen of the state's 87 counties have the necessary infrastructure to support text-to-911 calls. Most of the systems are concentrated down in the Twin Cities metro area. But Burke said each multi-county region has at least one text-to-911 equipped facility.

Lieser anticipates Stearns County to receive the necessary technology during the first half of 2018.

However, while each region is able to handle texting, Hughes said text-to-911 should be a last resort for many.

"If you can make the call, make the call," he said. "Don't text."

Hughes said, one of the major disadvantages to texting an emergency to 911 instead of making a voice call is texting does not provide an accurate location for the emergency.

"When you call, we can often pinpoint your location much faster," he said. "And often times the dispatchers are able to pick up on cues from background noises or the inflection in your voice as to what is going on in that situation."

DPS says text-to-911 has the same 160-character limit as typical texts and could potentially bounce back if the texter is roaming. In addition, there is currently no language translation service for 911 texts.

Text-to-911 calls have often taken longer than traditional voice calls, Burke said.

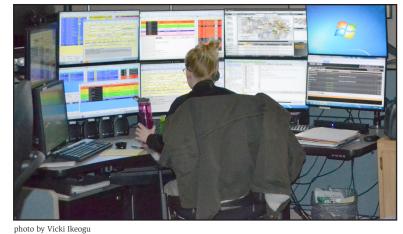

"You are going to get a better response (with a voice call)," she said. "And especially now, you won't have to deal with a relay from county to county. But if you have a hearing-impaired person or someone who cannot speak, it's obviously going to be better for them to text, but we would always prefer a voice call if (you are) able."

Lieser said examples of appropriate uses for the text-to-911 call ing still is the preferred method of communication with law enforcement.

"Studies about this have shown when people are encountering an emergency they would rather make a voice call than stop and text," she said. "Because you feel like you are getting more of an immediate response.'

For those situations where texting is the best option, DPS recommends texting the exact address and type of emergency into the message field using simple wording and avoiding abbreviations, emojis and pictures. Questions from the dispatcher should be answered promptly.

"The physical act of texting 911

Text-to-911 is still in the early stages throughout the state. Many dispatch centers, such as the Stearns County Dispatch Center in St. Cloud, do not have the appropriate infrastructure to receive texts. Text-to-911 service calls are currently funneled through Mille Lacs County.
