After 30 years, a last dance, a farewell

The crowd gives Shelly Teff a standing ovation for her 30 years with Sartell Community Education Dance

by Patric Lewandowski advertising@thenewsleaders.com

As they have for the past 30 years, dancers took the floor for the Sartell Community Education dance show on April 21. While all the dance shows of the past three decades have had something special about them, this one was a true tearjerker.

The 30th anniversary dance show was also founder Shelly Teff's last.

Sartell Community Education Dance was started by Teff in 1988, and featured 23 kids of all ages in one group. The very first dance show lasted five minutes, and had no costumes or sets. By comparison, this year's show featured 16 different dances by 11 different classes of dancers from ages 3 to 18, with more than 120 participants.

The show hit all the highlights, including a routine with all the dancers to start the show, a father/daughter dance and ending with a lightshow with all the dancers (minus the Tiny Tots group).

But, as with all good things, the end had to come, and with it, an emotional goodbye. It began with Teff recognizing two seniors who had been with her since they were Tiny Tots, Kimberly Kirick and Katherine Ronyak. Teff then recognized dancers who had been with her five and 10 years, as well as her entire team, including Hannah Ronyak who will be taking over the lead instructor position in the fall.

Green Card Voices travels to Sartell

by Dennis Dalman news@thenewsleaders.com

Green Card Voices, a traveling exhibit featuring the lives of immigrants to central Minnesota, will be widely seen in Sartell during the month of May.

One of the immigrants featured in the show is Sartell resident Zurya Anjum, who works as a psychiatrist at the VA Health Care System in St. Cloud.

Green Card Voices will be displayed at the Sartell Community Center from April 30 through May 11. The exhibit is open to one and all and admission is free. After its Sartell debut at the community center, it will move on to all of Sartell's five schools: May 7-11 at the two elementary schools, May 14-19 at Sartell Middle School; and May 21-25 at Sartell High School. An anonymous donation from a Sartell-St. Stephen community member is providing students and staff the opportunity to experience the exhibit at the schools, according to a press release from the Sartell-St. Stephen school district.

The lives of 18 immigrants are featured in Green Card Voices. A photo of each one is displayed on panels that are 8-feet tall, along with text and video of each person. The immigrants featured include people from countries that include Germany, Mexico, Somalia and El Salvador.

Sponsored by UniteCloud. com, the exhibit opened first at St. Cloud's Whitney Center in January. The purpose of the exhibit is to promote understanding and insights into the life stories of the immigrants their skills, their contributions, their cultural enrichments, their families, the struggles they've endured and the challenges of adapting to life in a new coun-

Grandview Poets hosts Minnesota poets' conference

by Tracy Rittmueller

news@thenewsleaders.com

Poets from all over Minnesota will gather April 28-29 to read their poetry and write new poems during the League of Minnesota Poets annual spring conference. Sponsored by Sartell's Grandview Poets, the event will be held at the Country Inn and Suites West in St. Cloud.

St. Cloud-area poets, under the leadership of Dennis Herschbach of Sartell, planned all the conference details including its theme, "Planting Seeds of Poetry," scheduling food and facilities, and working out the program.

Herschbach is founder of the League of Minnesota's St. Cloud area chapter. Their monthly meeting place at Grandview Apartments' community room lends the group its name.

Herschbach began writing poetry a little more than 12 years ago at the age of 62, three months after the death of his first wife. He remembers the exact day.

"She died in August," he said, "and Nov. 5, when the nights were getting longer, I sat down to write a poem about our lives...the history of us. It turned out to be a week long-project and I ended up with a five-page poem."

He showed it to a friend who was a poet and she told him his poetry was good, that he should Poets • page 4

Bike to school event May 9

by Mike Knaak editor@thenewsleader.com

Organizers of Sartell's Bike-to-School Day celebration hope the event puts the community on a path to being a more bike-friendly community.

Bike-to-School Day is scheduled for 2:30-5 p.m. Wednesday, May 9 at Lion's Park, 1030 First St. N.

Events at the park, that can be reached on the trail along Pinecone Road, include an obstacle course, helmet fittings and free food.

This is the first year for the event. Students at Pine Meadow Elementary School and Sartell Middle School are encouraged to ride their bicycles to school that day and then head to the park after school.

City Planner Nate Miller, one of the event organizers, said the idea resulted after the city applied to be named a bike-friendly community. The city received an honorable mention status and Bike • page 5 9:01 a.m. Medical. 520 First St. NE. An officer was dispatched to an assisted-living facility for an elderly woman who was not feeling well. The officer arrived and found the woman in her room. The woman was breathing but was unresponsive. The woman was not overly responsive but did respond to questions by squeezing the officer's hand. Gold Cross Ambulance arrived and transported the woman to St. Cloud Hospital.

April 12

2:22 p.m. Burglary. 12th Avenue S. An officer was dispatched to a residence for a burglary report. The officer met with the complainant who was also the homeowner. The man said he had been on vacation from April 3-11. When he returned home he had found his garage had been broken into. The officer observed signs of forced entry on the garage service door. The officer photographed the damaged door and completed a log of the items that were taken from the residence. The incident is under investigation.

April 13

5:33 p.m. Traffic accident. Sixth Street S. and 19th Avenue S. An officer was dispatched for a two-vehicle collision involving no injuries but was blocking traffic. The officer arrived and found a sport-utility vehicle pulling a boat that had jackknifed in the roundabout. After speaking with both drivers, the officer learned the write more. So he did. As a logger, he had put himself through college to become an aquatic biologist and high school biology teacher in the Duluth area. Later he was a lay minister for the Lutheran church in Castle Danger. All those varied experiences gave him plenty to write about.

"Poetry called to me," Herschbach said. "I think it was something inside of me that had to get out."

He wrote a collection of poems that turned into a memoir called Grief Journey, which won a 2010 Northeast Minnesota Book Award. He published five novels and a short collection of poems, and became president of the League of Minnesota Poets. Seven years ago, after marrying a woman from Sartell, he moved here and founded Grandview Poets.

"One of my goals was to expand the group's parameters and so I just talked around to some people. If I found out they liked poetry I said, 'Hey, how would you like to start a poetry group?'"

Half a dozen people came together to form the chapter. Hersbach, who continues to serve as its president, said, "We get together and critique each others' poems, and that's grown now to 14 or 15 members."

They will also discuss the conference theme, "Planting Seeds of Poetry," with keynote speaker Mara Faulkner, OSB, of St. Joseph and special guest Larry Schug, of St. Wendel Township.

"Poets try to express the inexpressible," Faulkner said at a recent workshop she led at the Spirituality Center of St. Benedict's Monastery in St. Joseph. Poetry takes abstract ideas like poverty, love, heroism and grief and moves them into the concrete, sensory world. Senses are the gateway to our emotions. Faulkner said she believes all people, at all stages of life, will respond to poetry if the poem can connect them to their own experiences, their own lives.

"About four years ago I did a project with Good Shepherd nursing home," Herschbach said. He asked the 12 participants to each bring a photo from their past. "We talked about poetry. I read poems, talked about what makes a poem good. And then I gave them an assignment. Write a poem about that picture."

One woman brought a picture of a tire swing, with a sunset behind it. She wrote about the empty swing, and the seven children she had not carried to term.

Bank on a meaningful difference

"It was really a good poem," Herschbach said. He made a book of all the participants' poems and pictures.

"I'd like to see poetry play a more central role ... in our area ... just in casual reading," he said. "People getting enjoyment out of a good book of poetry... reading maybe 10 poems before they go to sleep at night."

Herschbach thinks poetry has gotten a bad rap. He wishes people would open themselves up to the way poetry can express the inexpressible and help people understand each other on a deeper level. After reading Herschbach's poetic memoir about losing his wife, one man who had never before read poetry, bought four extra copies to give to his children.

Herschbach said, "He told them, 'I want you to read this because I've never been able to tell you how I feel. This is exactly how I feel. This puts it into the right words."

Judith Valente, in her book Twenty Poems to Nourish Your Soul, says poetry can be "a soul friend. It slows us down, helps us to see more deeply. It is a place of discovery."

The Grandview chapter of the League of Minnesota Poets exists as a place where new and experienced writers can cultivate their "soul friendship" with poetry and with other poets. According to its website, the league was established 84 years ago in 1934 "to make Minnesota poetry-conscious." All people interested in poetry are invited to attend conferences and meetings either as members or nonmembers.

Our View

Journalism ethics are more important than ever

Journalists don't like to be part of the story.

We prefer observing, researching the facts and conducting interviews to report the news.

But sometimes we have to step forward and talk about the work we do and how we do it.

This week is Ethics Week, a yearly project sponsored by the Society of Professional Journalists.

Most years, Ethics Week passes without notice. Usually there are seminars and workshops for journalists to reinforce ethical standards and address new ethical issues that demand discussion.

This year is different. Day after day, some political leaders confuse unconfortable and inconvenient reporting as fake news. Readers have to sort through conflicting stories found on social media to determine what to believe.

Journalism ethics have developed over time into a set of standards to ensure fair and trustworthy reporting.

You can read them at https://www.spj.org/eth-icscode.asp.

Journalists who support these standards work in the newsrooms that provide trusted reporting that is not fake news.

Whether you get your news from the Newsleader, the St. Cloud Times, WJON, MPR or the StarTribune, the reporters and editors in those newsrooms strive to live by that code of ethics. They are trusted sources and trusted brands.

Ethics standards address how reporters achieve fairness, how they handle conflicts of interest and how they pursue stories with compassion and empathy.

Yes, journalists make errors. But we explain and correct them. Yes, readers sometimes disagree with what we choose to report or how we choose to report it. Journalism is not a science. Editors and reporters often disagree about the importance of a story or what angle the reporting should take.

But we don't disagree about the facts, no matter how inconvenient or uncomfortable for those in power.

Ask many people these days where news comes from and they are likely to say from Facebook or Twitter.

That's wrong. News doesn't come from social media any more than food comes from grocery stores...leaving out of course the farmer.

Good reporting takes time. The process is inefficient and expensive. Twitter and Facebook don't employ even one journalist. The costs associated with reporting are borne by mostly print-based newsrooms and their associated websites.

SPJ lists five reasons we need ethics. They are:

- Information: Ethical journalism results in quality information people need to live their lives.
- Accountability: Ethical journalism uncovers and reports on when those in positions of power abuse their office and status.
- Empowerment: Information often equates to power, and an informed public is a powerful public.
- Comfort: Ethical journalism can provide comfort and knowledge to communities seeking information on tragic events.
- Democracy: Ethical journalism is the cornerstone of an informed citizenry who can use their voices to alter lives

Please join us in "celebrating" Ethics Week by reading trusted news sources and holding all those who use the privileges of the First Amendment to the highest ethical standards

Most Thursday afternoons for the past few months, I've been sucked into a time machine.

My time travel has taken me back more than 50 years, to the early 1960s.

I traveled not on the H.G. Wells contraption, but through another obsolete mechanical process – photographic negatives.

If you're under the age of 25, this may be news to you: Before smartphones with cameras and selfie sticks, photographers documented their world and memorialized key events on mostly black-and-white photographic film.

Photographers or processing labs developed the exposed film and produced black-and-white negatives that were then used to make prints.

Negatives are not very user-friendly for most people. A bright snow landscape looks white and a black shirt barely shows up on a negative.

Making hundreds of thousands of negatives user-friendly began my time travel project.

My friend Tom Steman is St. Cloud State University's archivist. The archive preserves all those negatives in plastic pages, but Tom needed a way to make them more useful to researchers.

So, Tom asked me to help him convert those thousands of pages of negatives to "positive" digital proof sheets that are more easily read.

The project sounded easy – scan the pages and add data that corresponds to the archive's searchable database.

Wrong.

I quickly became distracted looking at the moments frozen in time.

During the 1960s, St. Cloud State grew rapidly. University photographers documented the rise of Halenbeck Hall, Garvey Commons and Atwood Center. As the campus expanded and pushed west, block after block of houses needed to be moved or torn down. My spouse grew up in one of those homes, a two-story house on Third Avenue, replaced in the 1960s by the Performing Arts Center.

Most of these images predate my own memories of the SCSU campus. I first remember visiting during the late 1960s for music or speech contests and sporting events. Later, in the mid 1970s, I returned as a student and from the early 1980s, I've taught one or two classes a year.

I've seen the dramatic change and growth first-hand.

It's fun to be reminded of how the campus used to look, but I found other images that reveal more significant changes.

Most photos show happy engaged, students. They are well-dressed: the men often are wearing jackets and ties, the women dresses. That's a big difference from today's students who often arrive for class in much more casual attire that falls below the expectation of casual Friday.

In the early 1960s, the faces of those well-dressed students were virtually all white and young, strikingly different than today's diversity of races, ethnicities and ages.

When photographers recorded important events in the 1960s, those group photos almost always showed older, white men, a big difference from the University's leadership team today.

Several pages of photos from November 1966 revealed a stark change in how our world has changed in the last 50 years. Hubert Humphrey visited campus as part of a campaign swing for local Democratic candidates just before election day.

In frame after frame, people surround Humphrey, a former U.S. Senator and sitting vice president. Not one uniformed police officer or Secret Service agent is nearby. In today's world, there's no way that many people would be able to mob the vice president.

University archives preserve the living history of the institution's faculty and students. In addition to photographs, the collection includes administrative records, books, artifacts and copies of the university's student newspaper, The Chronicle. Many of the materials can be found online at www.stcloudstate.edu/library/archives/default.aspx.

Or you can visit the archives on the third floor of Miller Center or contact via email at archives@stcloudtstate. edu. If you've been a student, a former faculty member or you're a central Minnesota resident curious about history, you too can hop aboard the time machine.

Reader says, characters in Trump's circle constitute 'mob'

Kent Nelson, Sartell

In his latest book, A Higher Loyalty, Truth, Lies and Leadership, James Comey in one of his accusations says Trump acts like a mob boss. Trump in his usual eloquent, lucid, presidential and mob-like manner calls Comey a liar, leakier, slippery James, not smart and says he should be locked up – kind of like crooked Hillary – who isn't locked up and yet his mob followers continue to chant at his outings, "lock her up," much to his amusement.

Trump's mob friends and associates know he is in complete control: they are all loyal and lie about all things big and small and revolve in a silent circle of assent; loyalty to Trump above morality or truth. So lets take a look at some of the characters in Trump's mob. The first three include Trump, the president; Elliot Broidy, Republican National deputy finance chairman; and David Pecker, owner of the National Enquirer. Every mob needs chippies, playmates, sex toys or molls as the mob refers to their girlfriends. Enter Stormy Daniels, Karen McDougal and Shera Behnard. Next the mob needs a fixer, pit bull, or a bag man - someone who takes care of the payoffs and intimidation. That would be Michael Cohen. Even mobs have standards they operate by so Cohen arranges the following: For a one-night stand with Trump, Stormy Daniels gets $130,000, a 10-month fling with Trump gets playmate Mc-Dougal $150,000 and a dalliance and pregnancy by Broidy gets playboy model Behnard $1.6 million. Not wanting proof of the fling, a decision had to get made and Broidy explains, "She alone decided she did not want to continue with the pregnancy and I offered to help her financially during this difficult time." Talk about loyalty and, "ouch" shouted the Republican religious evangelicals still supporting

Now every mob needs a PR person. Someone who can spin mob activities to make them acceptable. Hey, the mob says drugs, prostitution, gambling serve a social need and we provide them, all at low costs. Who better to spin the message then the owner of the National Enquirer, David Pecker. Inquiring minds want to know is the message Pecker promotes. So he prints a picture of Ted Cruz's father and Lee Harvey Oswald together, and Trump accuses Cruz's father of being part of the assassination plot of Kennedy. Just what inquiring minds want to know. Also, the PR man needs to be able to prevent negative stories that impact the mob. Such is the tactic known as "catch and kill." McDougal has a story that shouldn't get out if Trump is to be safe. Enter Pecker who buys her story for $150,000 and then kills it. Stormy has a story that shouldn't get out so a strong man meets her in a parking lot and tells her not to say anything about her fling and then looks into the back seat of her car, sees her daughter and says it would be too bad if her daughter didn't have a mom growing up. So Cohen has Stormy sign a non-disclosure agreement and gives her $ 130,000 and the story disappears. Until now, Trump thinks he is safe on both counts.

Mob members lookout for each other and support each other. Broidy and wife contributed $614,000 to the Republican campaign; Pecker is a frequent guest of Trump's Mar-a-Laga – birds of the feather flock together.

And so dear reader, you put all these characters and activities together and you've got a mob.

Letters policy

The Newsleader welcomes letters to the editor on current topics of local interest

Writers are limited to one letter every three months.

Letters must be signed and include contact information, such as an email or phone number, for verification,
